INSURANCE.

DURAND & MILLER,

GENERAL INSURANCE AGENCY!

COMBINED ASSETS, EIGHTY MILLIONS.

Home Insurance Co., New York. Fire Association, Philadelphia.
Hartford, Hartford, Ct.
Ætna, Hartford, Ct.
Glens Falls, Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company.

LOSSES PROMPTLY ADJUSTED AND PAID HERE.

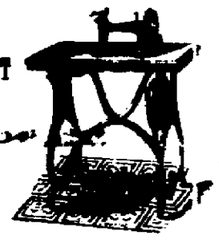
Office over Store of Weeks & Schroeder, 330 Main Street.

REMINGTON SEWING MACHINE.

REMINGTON SEWING MACHINE CO.

Is the One that Took the First Prize at the State Fair.

AND IS WITHOUT DOUBT THE



Best in the Market.

J. M. TOPPING, in Charge. J. C. STACY, General Agent.

SILVER PLATED WARE.

Racine Silver Plate COMPANY,

Incorporated 1875.

WE ARE NOW MANUFACTURING

Silver Plated Goods,

BRITANNIA,

AND PLANISHED TIN WARE.

And Will keep on hand a full assortment of Castors, Cups, Goblets, Ice-Pitchers, Tea and Coffee Pots, Spoons, Knives and Forks. Also, all other goods in our line required by the Trade.

Ask dealers for RACINE WARES, and take no others. Every Article is Warranted full weight of Silver, and deposited on the Finest Quality Metal.

☞ This Company calls Particular Attention to their facilities for Replating and Repairing worn and damaged goods, and to the fact that the expense of Replating is Barely one half the Cost of the same goods when new.

PAINTS AND OILS.

LANGLOIS & SON,

145 Main Street.

OILS, PAINTS,

Brushes, Glass,

ARTIST'S MATERIALS,

A FULL ASSORTMENT

Lamps, Chandeliers,

A LARGE LOT OF

FLOOR AND TABLE

Oil Cloths,

WALL PAPER,

INCLUDING

Stamped Gilts, French Embossed, Bronzes, Satins, and Plain Tints.

☞ Look at our Goods before going to Chicago.

CLOTHING.

CLOTHING! CLOTHING!

138 Main Street,

RACINE, WIS.

F. ELMLINGER

Has just returned from New York, with one of the Largest and best selected stocks of

Goods & Clothing

That was Ever Brought to this Market.

He also carries on the

Tailoring Business

And Makes to Order,

All Kinds of the most Fashionable

Gentlemens' Clothing.

His FURNISHING GOODS will be sold at Prices to suit the times. He also keeps on hand a varied stock of Cloths, Cassimeres, Vestings, Linens, Shirts, Collars, Neckties, Handkerchiefs, &c.

SADDLES AND HARNESS.

C. COMSTOCK & SON,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

Saddles and Harness,

ALSO KEEPS IN STOCK

Whips, Buffalo and Lap Robes, Horse Clothing, Boots, Nets, &c.

☞ Particular attention given to Carriage Trimming.

113 Main Street.

Advertise in The Journal.

HARDWARE.

AT

C. B. HALL'S,

No. 11 Sixth Street,

Continues to keep a full line of Plain and Fancy Cooking

Stoves,

Of Latest Improved Patterns. Also,

House Furnishing Goods Generally,

WHICH ARE SOLD AT THE Lowest Cash Price.

Best Parlor STOVE

New RADIANT HOME.

Furnace

For Heating the upper stories of houses, in addition to warming the room in which they are placed.

I would especially call attention to the Revertable Plate and Draft Stove, by which the stove is most thoroughly and easily heated from top to base. You can't fail to be pleased with the "New Radiant Home" for every respect. Our cooking stoves are the best extant. Take the Best Premium every time, and give satisfaction. C. B. HALL.

REMOVAL!

E. R. Cooley,

Calls the attention of the Public to the fact that he has removed to the Store lately occupied by HOISS & ERB,

161 Main Street.

Second door North of the New Post Office, where he will keep a great variety of

Cooking Ranges,

FURNACES,

Cooking and Parlor Stoves,

Housekeepers' Hardware, &c.

WE ARE SELLING AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

E. R. COOLEY.

Business Resumed.

HARDWARE

NAILS, Etc.

H. RAYMOND,

No. 137 Main Street, Racine,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

Shelf Hardware,

IN ALL ITS VARIETIES

In resuming my business, after a temporary suspension, I have added to my extensive stock a full line of Cooking Utensils, STOVES, and also the patent extension Tin Ware, by, together with a full stock of Housekeeping Articles, including Tin Ware. My Stock is now complete in every department of a first class Hardware Store. I shall buy my Manufacturing Department always complete in all its appurtenances, by a competent mechanic. Hoping for a call.

H. RAYMOND.

SHAW & BRO.,

DEALERS IN

Tin and Hardware. Stoves of all Kinds.

ALL KINDS OF JOB WORK Promptly Attended To.

No. 121 Main Street.

DENTAL.

DENTISTRY.

J. C. LUKE'S DENTAL ROOMS.

OFFICE ESTABLISHED 1856. ORIGINALITY CONSTANT.

All operations performed on the teeth in the best manner and with the best material. Artificial teeth inserted substantial and beautiful; best in the city. Prices reasonable.

☞ Office in Lee's Block, west side Market Square.

The Racine Journal.

RACINE, WISCONSIN, JANUARY 1, 1876. NUMBER 1.

NOTICE.

Sewing Machines REPAIRED.

O. WISCHMEIER.

J. R. SLAUSON & CO.

Wholesale and Retail

DEALERS IN

LUMBER,

Lath, Shingles, &c.

D. M. MONTGOMERY,

County Surveyor,

DURLINGTON, WIS.

LOUIS SCHADEGG,

Wines and Liquors

No. 101 MAIN STREET.

Racine, Wisconsin.

Barber Shop, Perfumes and Cigars.

THE BEST FITTED UP

Barber Shop

IN THE CITY.

Good Operatives Always in Attendance.

JOHN BAILEY, Proprietor.

House-Raising and Moving.

PRICES REASONABLE.

JOSEPH M. STARK.

GROCERIES.

H. T. TAYLOR & SON

DEALERS IN

CHOICE

Family Groceries,

And Fruits in their Season,

WHICH WE OFFER

At Low Prices.

Extra Inducements Offered on

VESSEL SUPPLIES.

Goods Delivered

In any Part of the City without Extra Charge.

All kinds of Country Produce Taken in Exchange for Goods or Cash.

Corner of Sixth Street and Market Square.

H. T. TAYLOR. CHAS. G. TAYLOR.

PIANOS.

F. ECKHART,

MANUFACTURER OF

PIANOS

Of Different Styles,

No. 76 SIXTH STREET.

I make a Specialty of

UPRIGHT PIANOS.

Tuning and Repairing of Pianos Done on Shortest Notice.

F. ECKHART.

MEDICAL.

N. H. BROWN, M. D.,

Physician and Surgeon,

CALEDONIA CENTER, WIS.

Residence at 'Squire Hamilton's.

DR. A. P. PECK,

Physician and Surgeon.

☞ Residence, Main Street, three doors south of Tenth. Office and Electrical Rooms, corner Main and Sixth Streets, first floor.

ELECTRO-MAGNETIC

Steam Baths,

FOR THE CURE OF

Rheumatism and Neuralgia.

☞ The Baths are now in excellent running order.

No. 4 Sixth St.

D. H. MUIR, M. D.

WASHING MACHINE.

TRY THE "BEST"

Washing Machine

Manufactured by

WINSHIP BROS.,

AT THE

RACINE PUMP FACTORY.

HOTEL.

Congress Hall,

Corner 3d and Chatham Streets,

RACINE WIS.

SENECA RAYMOND, Proprietor.

MEAT MARKETS.

Washington Market,

S.W. Cor. Main and Fourth Sts.

GORTON & JONES,

DEALERS IN ALL KINDS OF

Meats, Game, Poultry,

SUGAR-CURED HAMS,

Dried Beef.

Breakfast Bacon.

Lard, Etc.

HIRAM GORTON. E. O. JONES.

MEAT MARKET.

BOLTON & CASTLE,

AT THE OLD STAND ON SIXTH ST.,

PACKERS OF

BEEF & PORK

AND DEALERS IN

ALL KINDS OF MEATS,

POULTRY,

AND

Game in its Season.

Vessels Supplied on Short Notice and on Reasonable Rates.

I WOULD

Respectfully announce to many patrons, that on and after the first day of November, 1875, my books will be closed, and thereafter sell and will make prices so low that it will be an inducement to pay CASH. I will guarantee prices as low as the lowest, and will not be undersold.

FOR CASH,

JOHN VAUGHAN.

DRESS AND CLOAK MAKING.

MRS. H. W. OADY. MISS E. F. BROWNE

FASHIONABLE

Dress and Cloak

MAKING.

No. 170 Wisconsin St.,

(BETWEEN FIFTH AND SIXTH.)

Racine, Wisconsin.

FOR

FINE JOB WORK

CALL AT THE

Journal Steam Printing House.

DRY GOODS.

Great Bargains

—IN—

DRY GOODS

E. McENERY

No. 158 and 160

MAIN STREET,

Will offer this Week, at

Greatly

REDUCED PRICES,

NEW SHADES IN

Silks.

NEW SHADES IN

Irish Poplins

NEW SHADES IN

French Cashmeres,

NEW SHADES IN

FRENCH MERINOES.

Also a very large stock of French and Paisley

SHAWLS.

CARPETS at Cost. Blankets and Flannels less than manufacturers' prices. Seven thousand yards of good Standard Prints, from auction, at 5c per yard. Ten thousand dollars' worth of Beavers, Broadcloths, Cassimeres and Jeans, purchased lately at forced sales, to which the attention of the purchasing community is invited.

E. McENERY,

153 and 160 Main St.

GROCERIES, PAINTS, OILS

GROCERIES.

Sugars, Syrups, Pure Teas, Coffees and Spices. Dried Fruits, Canned Tomatoes, Peaches, Cherries, Pine Apples, Raspberries, Damrons, Green Peas, Green Corn, Lobsters, Salmon, Sardines, Shad, Mackerel, Ocean Trout and Cove Oysters, Pickled Walnuts, Chow Chow, Cauliflower and Mixed Pickles, No. 1 Mackerel, White Fish and Pickled Salmon, Fruits in the Season, Wooden Ware, Tubs, Pails, Wash Boards, Sugar Buckets, Kelers, Seives.

AND IN FACT

EVERYTHING

Usually Kept in a

FIRST-CLASS GROCERY HOUSE

E. N. Pushee & Co.,

Nos. 1 and 3 Sixth Street.

WALL PAPER

New Styles.

WALL PAPER!

Prices Lower than Ever.

WALL PAPER!

Best Assortment in the City.

WALL PAPER!

Largest Stock in the City.

WINDOW SHADES!

In Great Variety.

WINDOW SHADES!

Something New.

WINDOW SHADES!

WINDOW SHADES!

MIXED PAINTS

OF ALL COLORS

Ready for Use

WE GUARANTEE

Our Goods to be First-Class

AND

PRICES AS LOW

AS THE LOWEST.

E. N. Pushee & Co.,

No. 1 and 3 Sixth St., cor. Main.

COPIES

OF THE

Racine Journal,

CAN BE HAD AT

Any of the Book Stores.

The Racine Journal.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY.

LARGEST CITY AND COUNTY CIRCULATION.

JOURNAL OFFICE,

Racine, Wis.

☞ A liberal discount will be allowed to Advertisers.

F. W. STARBUCK, Propr'tor.

Terms: $2.00 per Annum, in Advance.

VINO SANTO.

On a road a stranger, weary, dusty,
Of a sacred society,
Modestly presumes to take Gazella
Upon a bench with the core-worn legs;
Who politely asked from us,
Fresh and with a welcome dishes—
Vino Santo, Holy Wine!

On the first days of October,
Ripe in the shining sun—
On us in the dew of morning,
Clear as bubbled can be—
This begins the season's vintage;
Nature sends this crown for us—
Vino Santo, Holy Wine!

Past the winter, past the springtime,
Time numbers far and free;
For the cup of Vino Santo
They who keep need free and early
On a glowing heat can depend—
Glowing heat and a mellowness,
Vino Santo, Holy Wine!

Date to-day, the orange, musk, dusty,
Sealed in nectar's fine and fragrant;
Time and chance and time lovers,
Hand by hand and signed for Kim,
Sweet, pulpous, from Lucy's vintage
Turn it last for my dinner,
Vino Santo, Holy Wine!

—Scribner for January.

MAIL BREVITIES.

—The bonded debt of Ohio is $7,049,026.

—The Buffalo centennial movement has gone up.

—Seabrook, N. H., has a log house built in 1636.

—Of 10 coal mines will yield 5,000,000 tons this year.

—Lumbermen up north complain of the scarcity of snow.

—An Abilene, Kansas, farmer has 2700 acres of wheat.

—Coal is being discovered in about every county of Kansas.

—Stevens Point claims to ship $100,000 worth of lumber daily.

—Switzerland possesses 165 cotton mills, running 2,050,350 spindles.

—On Christmas day Green Bay was as free from ice as in mid-summer.

—There have been 1,500 lives lost on the Pacific coast within a few years.

—Waupaca wants to have its city charter repealed. They think it don't pay.

—Philadelphia hotel-keepers promise not to charge more than five dollars a day at the Centennial.

—The Chicago Times which taps the "suburbs" with wires, pays $100,000 a year for special local telegrams.

—Ninety-two thousand emigrants have arrived in this country since January 1. Of these, 25,600 were Germans.

—The iron works in West Depere are in operation again, with a limited force of men, turning out agricultural machines.

—It is stated that 5,000,000 salmon will be planted in Michigan waters in the next four weeks. There are also 800,000 whitefish doing nicely.

—The Supreme Court of Iowa has decided that a piano is "a necessary family expenditure" in the case of a person in comfortable circumstances.

—The Monroe Sentinel published the President's Message in the form of a serial. The concluding chapters were published in its issue of December 22d.

—A lantern maker in Japan is making a great number of lanterns, with the likeness of an eagle on the side, for the American Centenary celebration next year.

—San Francisco has a whaling fleet of eleven vessels, and the catch this season yielded 16,000 barrels of oil, 150,000 pounds of bone, and 20,000 pounds of ivory, the aggregate valuation being $500,000.

—The number of letters received and forwarded through the New York postoffice in a day is estimated at 624,275, and the weight of the letters and of the printed matter, including newspapers is computed at 5800 tons, which is more than the entire weight of the freight that most express companies get in a year.

—The winter in Austria seems to be severe. A telegram from Vienna, of the 6th inst., says that snow has been falling incessantly. The trains to Italy and Hungary are stopped, and the stations temporarily closed. Goods traffic is entirely suspended on four lines. In Vienna the police are taking special precaution to prevent accidents from the snow in the streets. In some of the country districts the snow is nine feet in depth.

—Dynamite is scientifically described as nitro glycerine absorbed by pulverized silex or by a certain kind of earth found in some parts of Germany the effect of the absorption being to suspend the explosive properties of the nitro-glycerine and thus render it safer in transportation. Another name for it is "giant powder." In appearance dynamite resembles a damp, grayish sugar. It is non-explosive, provided the manufacturer is skillful and careful and all the conditions are right, but, unfortunately, it has the properties when least expected.

BRIGHAM YOUNG has begun the erection of a massive stone wall around ten square rods of soil, wherein are to be buried himself and choice lights of his family. An adjacent mountain plateau can be added for his wives.

SOME of the respectable New Yorkers are talking about a political "Committee of Safety" to administer upon the effects of the late "Committee of Seventy."

HIS HONOR AND BIJAH.

An Hour at the Central Station Court.

When his Honor came in Bijah slid up to him, and with an awfully important look on his face whispered:

"I think I've got Boss Tweed!"

"No!"

"Sure's you live!"

"Bring him out!"

The old janitor entered the corridor and brought out a man whom he had arrested just after daylight. He was a little withered-up man, with a cracked voice, and as he came out his Honor leaned against the wall and laughed until the tears rolled down his cheeks.

"B-boss—T-tweed—haw-haw-haw—oh!" he gasped.

"What are you afine about?" asked Bijah in an injured tone of voice.

"Turn that old man out of doors, you doughhead you!"

"Why?"

"Why? If I were he I'd sue you for $50,000 damages! He's Boss Tweed about as much as you are Queen Victoria!"

"And I'll do it!" squeaked the little old man.

He went out doors threatening to commence suit before breakfast, but Bijah followed him to the corner and was seen to hand him a jack-knife, a pair of green sleeve buttons, a new box of paper collars and a nickle, and perhaps no suit will be brought. Bijah skulked into the corridor by the side door and rattled the stove around and kicked things about until the bell rang, when he brought out

A THIRD TERM MAN.

"What is your other name besides peter?" asked the court.

"Peter Bedstead," was the sulky reply.

"Is that your name?"

"Yes'r."

"Well, Mr. Bedstead, you were here about a year ago and I put a mattress on you in the shape of a three months' sentence. You returned here six months ago and I gave you a bolster in the shape of one month up there. You are a Bedstead which needs to be repaired pretty often."

"I don't get drunk any oftener than lots of other folks," growled Peter.

"That may be so, but you are caught oftener."

"I tried to get away," protested Peter, "and I wasn't very drunk."

"Peter, what do you do?"

"Drink whisky, drive team, and lick any man of my weight," was the prompt reply.

"All right, Mr. Bedstead; you are a whole furniture wagon, according to your own idea, and they need you at the House of Correction. I'll say four months this time."

"Say and——!"

His Honor stopped him by a look, and quietly said:

"Mr. Bedstead, don't make use of any expressions which might result in your going to the hospital instead of the House of Correction!"

And Mr. Bedstead went quietly to the head seat on the saw-horse.

A NEW SETTLER.

"Say, you, I want to go home!" exclaimed Aaron Wallace, as he came through the door.

"Mr. Wallace, we are always wanting. The man who wrote 'Man wants but little here below' didn't live a great while because they sent him to a lunatic asylum."

"But I must be off on the early train," persisted the prisoner.

"What train?"

"For Klumbus."

"There are many sad thoughts connected with your case," said his Honor, as he leaned back and tossed a chestnut from one hand to the other.

"That train will go, Judge, and leave me here!"

"I think it will. Many trains will come and go without regard to you. You came here a stranger, thinking to settle in Detroit—in the only city in the world where a grocer will give you a box of soap if you hint to him he puts sand in his sugar. You lied to the people, had a fight in a street car, got drunk, and the way you became a settler was to settle down in the mud."

"I'll give a million dollars to get out of this!" exclaimed the prisoner.

"I don't doubt it, Mr. Wallace, but the die is cast—the mould is prepared—the silver cord is loosened, and you go up for thirty days."

"Oh! Whack! You don't mean it, do you?"

"Mr. Wallace, I cannot tell a lie."

"I've got to go home—I must go—I will go!"

"Be calm, Mr. Wallace; you are a red-faced man with an unusually large jugular, and excitement might bring on a stroke of apoplexy."

"I'll—hold on—dumit—stop pinching!" shouted the prisoner as Bijah drew him into the foggy atmosphere of the waiting-room.

OLD SLAM BANG.

[illegible]

He was a beautiful animal to look at, a saddle. When mounted he would lie down and travel on his side. He wouldn't do it at the word back, and he couldn't [illegible] by hooking. He would buck and fling and do that fashion [illegible] rear up and fall over backward on you, and afterward kick and bite you if you chanced to be a little slow in getting yourself scarce. He could scale the loudest and [illegible] of a board fence and alone.

His trick of concealment was to stay asleep and hide down close to his body, and when the way the dog's hair went, "Old Slam Bang" was a cantaloupe. I have known him to kick a dog, fifty yards at one clip.

If you were to go before him and just point your finger at him, he would lay back both ears, part his lips enough to show his teeth, and with a deliberate lunge and squeal he would clear you up a tree or in some other place of safety.

His appetite was peculiar; sometimes he required a change of food as the way of a sollicitous overcoat or a piece of tent. To this kind of food he always helped himself. And he preferred an overcoat taken fresh off a man's back in a rainy day to any other way it might be served. Never would he ever eat a bed in a tent under the weather chance I to be rainy. No halter, strap or rope would hold him; he would bite a rope in two the first bite.

He was of a solitary disposition. I never knew him to take a shine to but one mule, and that one had to be either too the mark of light when Slam was around. He seemed to like horses in one amount. They were a good mark to kick at.

The only thing you could safely approach him with was an apple. One day a darkey gave him an apple with red pepper in side of it it. For the next half hour there was fun in that camp. Old Kim coughed, sneezed and heaved. He was Slamendicky for a month, at the end of which time he kicked a darkey (about the size of the one that gave him the apple) into the middle of an adjoining lot. After that Kim enjoyed better health.

One day a shell from the enemy whizzed over his head, making a terrible screech. Slam lowered his ear flat on his neck, opened his mouth and made a grab for it, but it wasn't there. The next one burst and wounded him in the shoulder. The wound was severe, and our mule groaned like a man, and made a great fuss over it. He recovered, was given to the cook of the officers' mess, and afterward was a faithful and obedient animal.

A ROME correspondent gives this gossip about the Pope: "His Holiness, who is a great snuff-taker, wears out five cassocks a year; each cassock costs twenty pounds. His red cape costs about thirty-two pounds; it lasts him about a twelve month. His silk stockings, which are made by a Belgian house, costs four pounds a pair. His shoes vary in price, according to the nature of the embroidered cross on them: one pair is decorated with crosses of brilliants, worth four thousand pounds. The pope's old clothes are eagerly sought after by devotees, who keep them as religious relics, and many are the faithful who write to him to beg the gift of an old slipper or pocket-handkerchief, but the Holy Father, as a rule leaves the matter in the hands of his valet who naturally makes fine pickings."

Keeping the Hands Smooth.

A writer in the American Grocer says that glycerine is not used in the right way. She asserts that to preserve the smoothness and softness of the hands, keep a bottle of glycerine near the place where you habitually wash them, and whenever you have finished washing them, and before wiping them put one or two drops of glycerine on the wet palm, and rub the hand thoroughly with it, as if it were soap, then dry lightly with a towel. Household work and bad weather will not prevent your skin from being smooth and soft, if this plan of using glycerine is followed.

Contemplated Expedition.

The latest advices from the English Arctic Expedition state that an unusually easy passage has been effected to within 100 miles of the entrance of Smith Sound; and it is hoped that, if circumstances continue equally favorable, the 600 miles may be reached this year. The expedition is not expected to return, however, until the close of 1877. July 25, the Albert met with a slight accident, getting aground on a small island off Kingatok; but the vessel floated off without any injury, with the rise of the tide.

IT is said that corn loses one-fifth by drying, and wheat one fourteenth. From this the estimate is made that it is more profitable for the farmer to sell unshelled corn in the fall at 75 cents than at $1 a bushel in the following summer, and that wheat at $1.25 in December is equal to $1.50 in the succeeding June. In cases of potatoes—taking those that rot, and are otherwise lost—together with the shrinkage, there is little doubt that between October and June the loss to the owner who holds them is not less than thirty-three per cent.—New York Bulletin.

THE ladies needn't be frightened about striped stockings, after all. The poisonous acid used in coloring them is also used to impart to whisky its cheerful hue; and Prof. Harrison says that intemperate people live longer than temperate ones.

A WITTY career of a Massachusetts girl, who has been for eight months seeking her fortune on land and sea in men's clothes, was checked by her arrest at Long Island City a few days ago. Her maiden name is Alice Holmes, and she was born at Wareham. After a short wedded life at the age of fifteen she separated from her husband, a Western boy, supported herself a year or two, and, last February, donned pants and coat, and worked in a coal-yard at Providence until April, when she tried farming awhile in Connecticut, but returned to Providence and worked on a river steamer. Liking the business, she bribed a boy to be examined for her, and in June ship-

The Racine Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

WEDNESDAY JANUARY 5 1876

1776 1876

With this issue we commence the second century of our national existence. How much we have advanced as a component of history I may. From that small handful of settlers which, on the 21st of December A. D. 1620 was landed on Plymouth Rock, to be one of the most prosperous nations of the civilized nations of modern times. It is a curious page to read in history to trace the certain elements are concerned, but particularly to call attention to one page from the time when Louis Hassock and his compatriots promulgated that Magna Charter of American liberty the "Declaration of American Independence" wherein it was set forth "That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

When the patriot fathers had determined to throw off the British yoke it was known that they were engaging in no holiday pastime. It was with a purpose they could see that great results were to follow but that the full fruition was only to be reached through hardships privations and sufferings.

At length when the mother country was compelled to acknowledge our independence the ablest and best minds set to work to develop that vast territory which had been virtually acquired by conquest and from the thirteen have grown thirty-eight rich and prosperous States.

Our growth and prosperity was watched by the despotic governments of the old world with feelings akin to jealousy. It was often asserted that our Government could not within itself the elements of its own destruction and when, after years of almost uninterrupted prosperity the dissolution of relation and secession raised its head the world sight that time had really come when they could say that Republican Government always had been and always would be failures. When the degenerate sons of glorious ancestry wanting in holy patriotism and maddened by party strife, stood ready to imbrue their hands in fraternal blood and one by one pull down the columns from the temple of our glorious Union which their noble ancestors had cemented with their blood, then the spirit of the patriot fathers which had descended unimparted for generations caused the entire North to rise as one man, and treason and rebellion were finally and for ever crushed out.

It is in peace and not in war that our great progress has been made. By the liberal legislation of the general and State Governments, the oppressed of all nations have been welcomed to comfortable homes in the western world and the descendants of the old Pilgrim Fathers, with the assistance of the sturdy emigrant, have beaten a track across the broadest prairie of the West, dotting them with school houses and churches, building up prosperous cities and constructing railroads until the sound of the Atlantic is held as with one hand and the Pacific slopes.

But the book is closed for the first one hundred years of our national existence, the balance is strongly in favor of all that is good and noble, and tending to improve the moral and physical condition of mankind. We now determine that the next one hundred years shall show a still greater advance and as years roll round, generation after generation shall hold in greater reverence that precious cargo of the May Flower discharged on Plymouth Rock.

A PIONEER EDITOR GONE

MORITZ SCHEFFER the pioneer German journalist of Milwaukee, and of Wisconsin, died at his residence in Milwaukee, on Wednesday morning last. He was a practical printer in Germany and was proof reader in the celebrated Cotta book publishing house at Stuttgart, where he read proofs of Goethe Schiller, and other celebrated writers of his country. He came to this country in 1848, and established a paper at Jefferson City, Mo. But after a few weeks of hard work in writing for the paper, setting the type, and carrying the paper from house to house the enterprise, not receiving the reward it merited, he abandoned it, came to Milwaukee. Mr SCHEFFER was closely identified with the interests of the German population of Milwaukee, and in September 1854, he established the Banner, the best German paper in the State of Wisconsin which, during those heated times was a vigorous champion of the rights of the foreign born element in the State. Mr SCHEFFER was the orator and adviser of the Germans, and in the roughest storms almost uncontrollable excitement, a few words from him were as "oil upon the troubled waters." Always prominent in all public matters always the friend of the friendless, his purse was always open—consequently he died comparatively poor. He occupied many offices of trust in Milwaukee and under President Buchanan was collector of customs for the port of Milwaukee. The Sentinel after paying an historical tribute to his memory gives the following testimonial of his worth from the German Editorial fraternity. As Mr SCHEFFER had many readers and friends among the Germans of Racine we republish the sentiments of sympathy.

On learning of the death of Mr Scheffer the directors of The Banner und Volksfreund Printing Company met, and adopted the following expression of regret and condolence.

We mourn, in the death of Mr Scheffer, the loss of one of the oldest and worthiest pioneers of the German-American press of the West, the founder of the first German paper in Wisconsin, the Nestor of German journalism in the United States.

By his death our city was bereft of one of her earliest settlers and citizens of one who had taken a lively and active part in her development one who earnestly contributed to every effort to advance the welfare and happiness of his fellow-citizens, and who was ever ready to promote their interests by word and deed.

In him the immigrants lose a warm friend whose influence as member of the Constitutional Convention they have most to thank for the privilege of the elective franchise after one year's residence in the State.

By his demise society is robbed of one of its most accomplished and popular members, his intimate friends of an upright and faithful friend and his family of an affectionate and thoughtful husband and father.

The secretary of the Board of Directors is hereby instructed to furnish the widow of the deceased with a copy of this expression of their condolence.

The directors the editors and employes of this establishment will participate in the obsequies of the deceased in corpore.

Milwaukee, Dec 28, 1875.

EXPLOSION OF GASOLENE.

Madison seems to have been suffering from too expensive gas, and a way was devised to bring the monopoly to time, the remedy was to construct works using the patent gasoline gas, and the Capitol House was the place selected for the experiment. The thing worked well for about two weeks when the tank commenced to leak. A man was set to work to discover and repair the leak. He used a candle to assist, the result was an explosion, with two or three men promiscuously mixed up with bricks, mortar, gas tanks, and several other things. Two or three doctors were called, and the pieces (of the men) were carefully put together, and it is thought after a few weeks will be almost as good as new. But that patent gas fixture, where is it? Probably for sale cheap, and the weary traveler will no more be lighted to his virtuous couch in that house by "patent gas."

THE RESIGNATION OF MR FANCS

For business man all over the United States, will regret that Hon. GEO. S. FANCS has at expected to resign his position as General Superintendent of Railway Mail Service. While the reason of his resignation is not definitely known, it is intimated that he has received proposals for effective different corporations at a salary nearly double that paid him by the government.

It needs but a glance to see that in lower grade and put into successful operation the best railway mail service in the world by perfected systematic labor, with a corps of men in his division second to none in the world, it is well known that at much reduced rates of pay he could make a service equally efficient, and at the same time reduce the expenses of the department. Mr FANCS has shown himself a true patriot, and has served his country well, and his retirement will be a loss to the public service.

MORE MONOPOLY

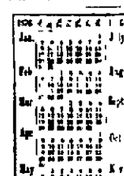
No content with propositions already made to place those who follow business or other pursuits at a disadvantage in the Atlantic cable the European companies contribute cable lines, proposed to transmit only such words that are thoroughly English. They propose to do away entirely with cipher messages from the first instant thus interfering with the general transactions. Upon the ground that the all for the cipher messages the receipts of money and stock market will be transferred to other matters, thereby the revenue derived therefrom to the Government will be greatly reduced. Let the people look to it, and let their representatives in Congress look to it, and let the Postmaster General look to it, and let the President look to it, and let the Congress look to it, and let the Supreme Court look to it, and let the people

The Racine Journal.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY

WEDNESDAY JANUARY 5, 1876

JOURNAL CALENDAR FOR 1876



RAILROAD TIME TABLE.

Western Union Railroad.

Departs.		Arrive
8 00 A M	Mail	8 40 P M
6 45 P M	"	9 00 A M

Trains runs the 90th to Milwaukee

Chicago & Northwestern Railroad.

Going North.		Going South.
8 00 A M	Mail	10 00 A M
1 45 P M	"	11 00 A M
5 15 P M	"	1 25 P M
12 15 A M	"	4 00 A M

Mails Close.

Going North.	Going South.
8 00 A M	11 30 A M
12 30 P M	5 00 P M
4 45 P M

Mail for Chicago, South and West are also sent on the 7 30 P M Train, arriving at Chicago at 5 A M

CITY BREVITIES

—1876

—Little strangers

—They are certainly freezing

Well, not! All counting in the census

—Cold rate the centennial

Best according to Fort Jackson

—And then see that we can hold the wind

—Happy New Year. Same to you

—No thank you! we only take collos in cure

Did you ever see such weather

—Have you got used to writing 1876 yet

This is the season of festivities and such things

—I thought I had a bad cold single but now

This is long year contain disease and pecuniary wear

How do you like the Journal as a supporter for the centennial?

Mr Coughlin the treasurer of St Luke's Church is broke in a leg

A few days such weather as we had last Sunday will bring the seed well up in

Through the cities on the lakes this year our lake marine is to [illegible] tons

Deputy Sheriff Tim Hyde says they are averaging about five tramps per night at the jail

The Journal is marked but the enlargement doubtless will accrue in internal arrangements

M Foster has a Chamberlain cow measure all to himself if caught with the shorts

We hear Santa Claus was in town

Tuesday was the tenth anniversary of the light fire which swept away Hotel Hall the Racine House, Episcopal church and Dexter's opera

Read the manufacturing report in another column. They are not corrected to date but are reports, nor are they guesses work but perfectly reliable

—The Two Orphans was produced last evening at Belle Hall by the McKee Dunlap Troupe to a large audience. The same play will be on the boards to night

On Saturday last a young lady presented THE JOURNAL local with a bouquet of full blown pansies, plucked on New Year's day, in Mound cemetery. Is this an omen?

—Get behind with the name of a popular newspaper if you would know how anxiously it is looked for. Such was the case with THE JOURNAL this week. The office and every news depot was besieged Tuesday night

—"May it please the court the jury is fogged," in the language of Burt Stebbins So it is with that much respected individual the oldest inhabitant. His memory runneth not back on the time when we had such a balmy spring-like morning on the 3d of January as was that of Sunday last —Duck Trist found a streaked snake in front of his door on New Year's day. This season these critters are crawling all over the prairie back of the city, something never known before. How is that for a country where snakes come out to sun themselves in January? Duck says he is ten inches long he has been preserved in a glass jar and his snakeship appears quite lively. He (the snake) has been interviewed by His Honor, Mayor Doud, and other good men. Is this another omen?

—JOSEPH FREUDENFELD & Co, No 115 Main street, have received a large lot of sleigh bells and are selling them for a song. Secure some before the are sold

H M WORKMAN then the finest lot of choice fancy perfumery at low prices

READ Edward McGarry's new advertisement. Persons in want of winter goods should now stock up—great bargains are offered in blankets for male customers and waterproofs and cotton goods can be bought low. Only think of good madder prints at five cents per yard

AT HARRINGTON & CO's establishment on Famous for excellence of their tea may be found the following varieties of all grades: Young Hyson Tea, Imperial Tea, Oolong Tea, Gun Powder Tea, Japan Tea, English Breakfast Tea

M of Miller & Co's

Ladies French Kid Boots

Ladies Public Goat Boots

Ladies Serge and Felt Boots,

Men's Fine Boots,

Men's Fine Shoes

Men's Heavy Boots

All kinds of misses and children's shoes

Come and see their new styles for spring trade. All work custom made and warranted

GLOVES and mittens at greatly reduced prices till Jan 15 at Jackson's 245 Sixth st

UNION CORNERS—H M Workman, No 1, Sixth street has a very fine selection of velopeas—both domestic and imported

A FINE lot of imported chest protectors at H M Workman's, No 3 Sixth street

Masonic Installation

At a meeting of Orient Chapter No 12 held at their hall, Dec 28th the following officers were installed for the year ensuing

H P.——, K—H B Bates S—A

J Bliss Sec'y—J R Browne Treas—Jno Elkins, C H—J Starch, P S—Wm Lobhouse R C—H Harkness, G M, 1 Vale—C Paddock G M 2 Vale—Tom Graham G M 3 Vale Tom Walls, Sen—M B James

On the same evening the following officers were installed for Racine Lodge No 18

W M—Wm R Tate, S W E Starch, J W—Thomas Howell, Sec'y—S C Yost Treas—Jno Elkins, S W—H Harkness, J W—Charley Taylor, Tyler—M B James.

The free Masonic sociable, given out for Tuesday of last week, was postponed (on account of the death of a member of the fraternity, Mr Henry Pyrrell) to Thursday, (to-morrow) evening of this week. This is purely a masonic sociable, Masons and their families are cordially invited—"none others need apply"

MANUFACTURES.

The Year 1875 "Pans Out" $5,805,786.

Increase in Manufactures Over Last Year, $1,626,521.

J. I. Case & Co., Head the List with $1,250,000.

Mitchell, Lewis & Co. and Fish Bros & Co., Follow with $1,000,000.

Other Manufacturing Firms in Proportion

Into the history of the reputation of the city as a most flourishing manufacturing town in the West for the year 1875 making up the annual report from figures given from the books of the manufacturers, it is with pride that we review the last year's business and in the recapitulation we place the figures of former years noting the steady and healthy increase in the amount in dollars and cents of manufacture articles requiring the employment of an increased amount of skilled labor consequently adding to our population and making more real work the trade of the city engaged another branch of industry. The location for health and the superior advantages for the shipment of the heaviest articles of manufacture, are certainly great facts to establish our manufacturers in look for a year so prosperous new and extensive establishment located in our midst. New firms are being built from the trunk railways of the Wis and N W to the very doors of each establishment use &c. Mitchell Lewis & Co, Fish Bros & Co all the other firms want the extra accommodation for the shipment of manufactured articles and encouragement to the carriers of the raw material used in these manufactories. Shipment by water side affords a other advantage that cannot be slighted by looking Racine over as a place in which this can better than condition in all that pertains to the choice for doing business well and the conveniences of home, the superior chances of schools, church, children and the advantages of a healthy

Manufacturing was really first commenced in Racine at the year 1848. It is only a pleasure to our first settlers that have been used to recall the early days their friends that settled down from the eastern States. People in those days were content to make a living and build homes in the fast more than to the pursuit of wealth

SHADOWS OF THE DYING YEAR.

Sitting alone in the gleaming,
Watching the shadows creep
Fall my door,
And across the floor,
Where the moonbeams lay asleep.

Thro' a beautiful silvery moonlight
Has Sleep in the way fled,
Leaving close to my feet,
Through the cold and heat
Of the dear, sweet year now dead.

Is some will the shimmering glory,
When the dear dead year was new;
When my heart's rare love,
As a spirit drew,
Was pure, and beautiful too.

But the springtime died in the summer,
Or the summer had died in the fall,
Or the falling leaves
Of the maple trees
Had brought to my heart the pall.

Now gone is the springtide sweetness,
And gone is my life's bright dream;
So, let the shadow
Pass unchanged over
That carried to light my gloom.

And I'll sit in the deeper gloaming,
And watch, and wait, and love,
Till the ghost
Of a beautiful year that is lost
Will steal or come back to me.

LEXA CLOVER.

POOR AGNES.

The cool twilight of a calm summer morning brightened gradually into the glorious splendor of a June sunrise. Here and there, through the valley, wherever grassy knolls or wooded places rose above the surrounding slopes, the golden sunlight tipped their summits, and then, creeping down their sides, at last kissed the rippling surface of the brook, which seemed to welcome its advent with a more joyous murmur, and finally flooded the whole valley with its glory. Just as the slanting rays caught the snow sides of a picturesque cottage at the very foot of the eastern hills, a thin line of smoke issued from the chimney thereof, slowly increasing in volume and density, and then dwindling down again into the decorous blue vapor that arises from a kitchen fire thoroughly kindled and ready for its day's work. Just as it did so the back-door of the cottage opened and a pleasant-faced young woman stepped out. A bright, rosy-cheeked, stout girl, with a smile upon her face as cheery as the sunshine, and a laugh in the tripping of her feet. You could see, as she bustled about—now bringing water from the spring, now carrying ashes to their neat receptacle—that she was the maid of all work, and that her hands had started the curling column of smoke that now lazily climbed through the atmosphere. Early as it was, she had nothing of the cloven about her. Her dark cotton gown was pinned cunningly up, and protected in front by a clean colored apron; her hair was properly combed, but covered carefully by a white kerchief; her neck prettily encircled by a snowy collar, held by a coquettish ribbon, and her red and shapely arms bare to the soulder. A very picture of a house-maid, as she ran quickly to the coach house, and turn, that stood some way back of the house, on the increasing slope of the hill.

"Good morning, Jim!" she exclaimed as she entered the barn, where a good-humored, red-faced man-of-all-work was already busy polishing up some harness.

The man turned toward her with a grin on his face, and returned her salutation.

"Up already, Bess? Why, you're early this morning, ain't you?"

"It's such a lovely morning, Jim; and, besides, I was so anxious to know if you got that, last night. Did you?"

"Well, now, if curiosity ain't the failin' of my sex! 'Spose I didn't—what then?"

"O, Jim, stop your fooling. You know how much dear Miss Agnes is longing to get that letter, and I expect she will be down stairs waiting for me before I get back, just to know whether it's come or not."

"Well, then," replied the other, giving an unnecessarily heavy dab at the silver buckle he held in his hand, "if that's all she wants to know, you kin run back and tell her it has come."

"O, I'm so glad, Jim! Please give it to me. Hurry!"

"Why, what a hurry you're in this morning, Bess. Now what will you give me for it," he replied, going over to where his coat hung, and taking from the pocket an envelope with foreign-looking postmarks and stamps.

"Give you—impudence! You stop your nonsense and hand that over at once, sir!"

"Tout, tout! Don't fret yourself, Bess. Now if you want to carry this here letter to Miss Agnes, bad, very bad, mind you, you can have it this moment for a—kiss." And Jim held the letter behind his back, in his left hand, while he beckoned to the blushing Bess with his right. It was very provoking, certainly. There he stood, as impudent and unwavering as a wooden image, not even making an effort to collect the fee he called for, but unfeeling waiting; for, and insisting upon, the voluntary delivery of the coveted reward. Bess made an attempt to wheedle him out of his return, and that failing, made a feint of running behind him to snatch the missive, but Jim only turned on his heel, keeping his face still toward her, his head bent down, his eyes blinking with merriment, and his lips puckered to receive the salute.

"Well, if I must, I must, I suppose," at last consented Bess, with a blush so deep that the pink ribbon about her neck became pale by contrast. "Now you just hold that letter out to me so I can get hold of it, and—and—now mind—only one."

He did as desired, and she crept shy and hesitatingly toward him. As she stepped the envelope with her right hand, she would have snatched it away without redeeming her word, but Jim was too sharp for that, and before letting go, grasped her firmly with his right arm, and took not one, but half a dozen, sounding smacks, to the terrible confusion of her neat collar and tidy head-dress.

"For shame! Jim Ogden! I'm ashamed of you!" exclaimed Bess, she breathless, and blushing deeper than ever as she broke from him and ran rapidly out of the place with Miss Agnes' letter. The [illegible]

As she neared she heard the footsteps of Miss Agnes on the stairs. The latter entered the kitchen slowly, feeling her way by putting out her hands alternately to each side; and, as she stepped into the center of the room, she asked, in a subdued voice? "Bess, are you here?"

"Bless my heart, Miss Agnes, yes! And what in the world brought you down so early?"

"Bess, did Jim get—"

"Why, of course, Miss Agnes! And here it is now in my hand—just feel it—here's a foreign stamp on it, and a red ink mark that says 'Heidelberg.'"

"Hush, Bess! here comes father. Keep it till after breakfast. It must be good news—don't you think, Bess—or he wouldn't write, you know—would he?"

"Course not! Go in to breakfast now, and afterwards I'll read it to you. Don't let your hand shake so much, or the tea will be spilt over the tablecloth."

Agnes turned about quickly and, without any great hesitation or difficulty, met her father at the foot of the stairs. A large faced, broad-shouldered hale old man he was, with a way of throwing his head back when he spoke, like one of poor eyesight endeavoring to read without glasses.

"Good morning, papa," and "good morning, daughter," were the only salutation between them, as the old man took his daughter's hand and led her into the room where the breakfast awaited them. Agnes took her place at the head of the table, and waited assiduously upon the old gentleman. Just as he pushed his cup and plate away he caught sight of a letter which has been placed on the table before his entrance. "Goodness!" he exclaimed "why, Agnes, here's a letter from Frank!"

With a little start she uttered,

"From Frank, papa?"

"From Frank, Pet, if my glasses don't deceive me. Let us see," continued the old gentleman, as he opened the envelope. "Heidelberg—um—yes—many thanks—successful beyond expectations—gold medal—coming back again in a short time—um—um—very satisfactory—very, indeed: You recollect Frank Trout, of course, Pet?"

"O, yes, papa! He has been gone just three years, I think; just three years, for I remember it was three months after his departure that I—"

"Exactly, my dear; and it does your old father good to find that although you have lost your sight you have not forgotten old faces. I venture to say, now, that you can give a very good description of him as he was before he went away?"

Poor Agnes bent low over her tea-cup, trying to hide the rosy blush she felt riding over her face. Could she describe him! Ah, when she looked into her heart, where so many scenes, so many faces were indelibly pictured, was there any face that shone out in such vivid colors as the well remembered face of Frank Trout? Was there any scene so distinctly photographed upon the tablets of her memory as that parting at the gate three years ago? Three years ago, when he kissed her good bye at the gate; when he looked into those eyes of hers, now closed forever, and told her they should be his inspiration and solace as he toiled at the shrine of Art. Yes, as her father spoke, ignorant of the tie that bound his sightless daughter to the absent but triumphant artist, she saw and could describe his face, his figure, nay, even his soul, it seemed to her, with a precision and certainty that astonished herself.

"O, yes!" she replied softly, "I remember him very well indeed. A little taller than the average, perhaps,—a good face, without being exactly handsome—dark brown hair, which he used always to keep cut short, to save the trouble of elaborate combing, as he used to say—a slight mustache, but no other beard; and eyes like—"

Poor Agnes felt her voice trembling. She could not look back at and speak of those deep blue eyes, into whose depths she had often gazed, and whose truthful candor had so often certified to the words she loved to listen to, without emotion.

"Never mind, my child," interrupted the old gentleman, a tear or two forcing their way to dim his vision, "I know that it is a painful subject—that is, eyes are—never mind, pet, never mind his eyes."

"Dear papa," she replied, while her face cleared up like a landscape bursting from shade into sunshine, "it is not that exactly—don't fret on that account. You know I can see just as well as you, papa. You never go from here, so what can you see more than I see now—now, and every hour of the day. Nay, more than that, while you see the surroundings under the varying skies, I only see them as they were a visible last, bright with the spring sunshine and luxuriant with buds and blossoms. Indeed, I am not so blind as you imagine!"

Old Mr. Melton rose up, wiping his eyes stealthily, and coming to where his daughter sat, leaned over her chair and kissed her fervently.

"God bless you child! Don't take everything in earnest. You do see as well or better than I do—and—and—kiss me good-bye again. There! now don't expect me for three or four hours."

Agnes listened till the footsteps of her father, going down the gravel walk, died away into silence. Then she jumped up hastily and ran into the kitchen, where Bess was waiting for her.

"Now, Bess," she exclaimed, "getting close to a chair, "now please tell me about Frank's letter."

Bess brought a chair close to that of Miss Agnes and drew the letter from her pocket.

"Give me your hand, Bess, as you read; it always seems to me as if I was reading to myself when I listen to you that way."

"Ah! let me always hear you talk like that, Miss Agnes, and then I'll always feel I'm near your heart. Are you all ready? I open and cut at speed, dear? now, we are ready."

[illegible]

[illegible] Bess, dear, [illegible] Bless your heart, Miss Agnes! Now don't worry that way; he's just writing now as if he was making a picture—putting on the lively touches, as he calls 'em, here and there. Wait a bit till we see how it ends;—'outline or of color'—eyes—and more than all that, the beautiful ideals your gentle fancy can discover where dulle eyes.' (Drat the man! why does he keep on about eyes?)—duller eyes could see but common-place. But it will all be soon realized, darling. Perhaps a week or two only, after you receive this letter, and I will hold in my arms the loveliest realization of beauty that artist ever dreamt of. I will leave here ten days from this, but of course may be delayed a day or so in Liverpool. In the meantime, look out for me any day after this reaches you.

And then, dear Agnes, I will ask your father for what you have already pledged to me—your hand and heart!—and that's all, Miss Agnes, except 'yours forever, Frank Trout.' Fiddle-dee-dee! If Sim Ogden was to write such stuff to me, Miss Agnes, I'd—slap his face.'

The listener could not suppress a laugh at this latter outburst of the reader, but she took the letter very tenderly after kissing it, put it away in her bosom.

For the next week or so Agnes was so distrait that her father, feeling anxious for the health of his only child, spoke to her once or twice, and rallied her upon the approaching visit of her old friend Frank.

'Why,' said he, the last morning he alluded to the subject, 'I used to think you and Frank were 'spoons' at one time. Bless my heart, it was a good thing you didn't fall in love—dear me, pet! what tears? O, come, this won't do, you know. I seem to be always saying something now-a-days to hurt you, though God knows I don't mean to do so. Perhaps, dear, I am too selfish. I always forget your misfortune. Now that I think of it, Agnes, what do you say to our taking a trip to some place by the sea shore,—Cape May for instance?'

'Oh! I would love it of all things, father.'

'Then we shall go at once! There is nothing to keep us here a day longer, Jim and Bess can take care of the place; and I believe a week or two spent there would do us both a world of good. Why didn't you think of it before?'

Poor child! she had thought a dozen times of getting away—to any place—before Frank came back. But how could she propose such a thing to her father without offering some reason for it? And now that the proposition came from himself she felt as if a special providence had put the notion into his head. It did not take them long to make the necessary arrangements, and two days afterwards father and daughter were en route for the fashionable watering places. At the last moment he called to mind the return of Frank Trout; but as he had no greater interest in him than in any of the neighbors, he did not think it worth while on that account to postpone the trip. 'We may be back again before he puts in an appearance' he said when speaking of it to his daughter, 'and at all events we won't be long away if he should come earlier than expected. But, bless me! these artists are a queer lot and like enough he may not turn up till fall.'

It was such a relief to poor Agnes, to be away from home the first days of his return! Before she could meet him he would have learned all, and the poignancy of the sad discovery of her accident would be probably so toned by that time, so that half the pain might be avoided. Besides, in her nervous condition the excitement and bustle of traveling, and taking up quarters in a new place, were exactly what her nature craved. She hoped and prayed that he might return to Woodstock during her absence, and she left a short quiet letter with Bess, to be given him on his arrival. Further instructions she deemed it unnecessary to leave; she knew and could could trust the faithful heart of the honest and affectionate woman, and left to her discretion the breaking of the news to Frank. Only one thing she regretted. She could learn nothing from Bess until her return home. Bess could write, but, alas! she could not read, and as her father was ignorant of her feelings she could not ask him to read for her.

The season had but just commenced when they arrived at the Cape. The hotels were by no means full as it was too early for the rush of transients that come in the warmer days of July and August. But there were a great many family parties already located there for the summer, and the quiet of the place although disappointing to her in one way at first, seemed to suit her better than the crush and noise and dissipation of a later day. The smash of the sea upon the sandy beach, the briny fragrance of the ocean breezes, the invigorating [illegible] Bless your heart, Bess, [illegible] Bless your heart, Bess, [illegible] Bless your heart, Bess,